When we shy away from rejection we reject ourselves and our ideas before the world ever has a chance to reject them. My video went viral on Youtube with over 5,000,000 views and I began to receive emails from people all over the world, telling me that my story of intentionally fighting my fear of rejection was somehow inspiring to them. The site also offers videos in multiple languages, including English, Chinese, French, Russian, Spanish and others. They all said yes.In the end, my 100-day journey concluded with 51 yesses and 49 nos.In the process of my rejection journey, here is what I learned about rejection: 1. It was something I shared with millions of people all over the world.As my rejection journey continued, I began to feel more and more fearless when asking for things. You no longer have to waste your time and money learning Python from lengthy books, expensive online courses or complicated Python tutorials. You can also use it to establish frameworks, like Pyramid and Django, or high-level content management systems, like Plone and Django CMS. This is the worst form of rejection and, as default, we are for the world. The greatest lesson I've learned from rejection no matter what, not ignored by the world. What about me? What software do you need to encode and run Python programs? It was an investment that would take our company to the next level and allow me to live the life I've always dreamed of. So something unexpected happened. While at dinner for a friend's birthday, I received an email from the investor who read: "Let's go." I was crushed. I would also film my rejection attempts and send them to my blog so that the world would keep me responsible. What came next was something I never imagined. On the first day, I approached a security officer and asked him for $100. He said no. I loved it. Most people believe that avoiding rejection is a good thing, avoiding something bad that we drained a bullet and somehow we are positive liquids. How this book is different...
